Tāone Tupu Ora

Indigenous knowledge & sustainable urban design

Edited by Keriata Stuart & Michelle Thompson-Fawcett

- How can traditional Māori built environments inform contemporary urban development?
- How could Māori values inspire our visions for the 21st century city?
- What can indigenous knowledge tell us about how to create a more sustainable design for the future?

Tāone Tupa Ora suggests answers to these important questions, bringing together perspectives on a broad range of urban issues, from Māori development to architecture, town planning to strategic growth management. It collects stories of iwi experiences in the 21st century, and suggests principles and theories on which to base change.
